

ACKNOWLEDGMENT OF RISKS AND LIMITED RELEASE

By our signatures below, we acknowledge that we have read this document, that For This Child Inc. (“FTC”) has advised us of risks associated with international adoption, and that we understand those risks and accept the responsibility of becoming adoptive parents. FTC has advised us to consult with an attorney of our own choosing, if we so desire, regarding this Acknowledgment of Risks and Limited Release, as well as the Adoption Services Agreement we are separately signing.

I. INTERNATIONAL ADOPTION ENVIRONMENT

We understand that many uncertainties exist during the process and completion of foreign adoption and that FTC has advised us that individuals and families who desire certainty and predictability in the adoption process and travel experience should seriously consider foregoing international adoption. We also understand that laws and circumstances vary greatly from country to country and that laws and circumstances may change during our adoption process that may make it more difficult, costly, or even impossible for us to complete our adoption, and that FTC is not responsible for such changes.

We understand that adoptions in Kazakhstan are controlled by the government. Neither FTC nor the in country associates with whom FTC works have any control over the process of referring a child. Referrals are solely at the discretion of Kazakh authorities. Nor do FTC or the in country associates with whom FTC works have any control over many of the variables that will dictate how long the adoption may take such as availability of the Kazakh authorities and timeliness of court hearings (these are examples only and are not exhaustive of the factors outside of FTC’s control). We understand that unavoidable delays and unexpected expenses are a real possibility during the process. Although extremely rare, we also understand that it is always possible that the judge in country may not rule favorably in regard to the adoption.

FTC has also made us aware that my case may be delayed or even become impossible to complete because of the actions of the United States Government.

II. MEDICAL/SOCIAL CONDITION OF ADOPTIVE CHILD

FTC has advised us, and we understand and acknowledge, that there is always the possibility of an undiagnosed or misdiagnosed condition that a child may have that may not be diagnosed until after the adoption is complete. FTC has promised to make available to us all medical and social records it is able to obtain regarding the adoptive child, but FTC is not responsible for the accuracy of such records and has advised us to consult with a pediatrician/health professional of our choice regarding such records. Moreover, because FTC cannot guarantee that any adoptive child will be healthy, and because FTC has promised to provide us all medical and social records it is able to obtain regarding the adoptive child, we agree not to hold FTC (or its principals, agents, or employees) responsible for the medical, health, social, and genetic risks and attributes of the child.
